

GROVE HOUSE

In the heart of Sydney’s dense suburban fabric, where homes stand close yet lives often drift apart, a family sought more than just space—they longed for breath, for flow, for a place where togetherness and solitude could coexist in harmony. Cadence & Co, masters of transformation, answered with a vision that did not merely extend walls but wove a living rhythm into them.

What was once a humble Californian Bungalow, rich in history yet constrained by its time, now unfolds in a dance of openness and connection. A new axis of movement—graceful, unforced—draws life through the home, linking past to present, inside to out. Sunlight spills through reimagined interiors, washing over textures both familiar and new, while a striking ribbon staircase rises like a sculptural thread, binding the story of the house together.

Inspired by the effortless elegance of Mid-Century Southern Californian homes, the extension cradles a central garden and pool—an oasis, a pause, a place where laughter lingers in the air. Here, in the interplay of light and shadow, the family finds sanctuary. In moments of togetherness, spaces breathe with warmth and ease. In solitude, walls do not confine but embrace, offering quietude without isolation.

Cadence & Co’s artistry lies not just in building, but in understanding the poetry of living. This home, reborn, does not merely shelter—it nurtures, it listens, it invites life to move freely, to gather, to retreat, and always, to belong.
